Group helps breast cancer survivors thrive

FRANKLIN, TENN. – Breast cancer survivors and women newly diagnosed with the disease have a new place to turn with Friends for the Journey. A six-week class that allows women to share and learn with one another, Friends for the Journey will meet 6:30 – 8 p.m. Mondays beginning March 1.

“Having cancer can be frightening, but a cancer diagnosis is also the beginning of a journey that illuminates a woman’s inner strength and determination,” says Kim Smith, R.N., breast health navigator at Williamson Medical Center and facilitator of the group. “Our goal is that through this experience women not only survive breast cancer, but also thrive in living life.”

The class is free and meets in the Oncology Library on the Fourth Floor of Williamson Medical Center. To register or for more information, call 615.435.6733
